Synopsis

Hedda, the famous daughter of General Gabler, married George Tesman out of desperation, but she found life with him to be dull and tedious. During their wedding trip, her husband spent most of his time in libraries doing research in history for a book that is soon to be published. He is hoping to receive a position in the university.

An old friend of Hedda's comes to visit her and tells her of Eilert Lövborg, an old friend of both women. Eilert Lövborg has also written a book on history that is highly respected. In the past, however, he has lived a life of degeneration. Now he has quit drinking and has devoted himself to serious work. His new book has all the imagination and spirit that is missing in George Tesman's book. Hedda's friend, Thea Elvsted, tells how she has helped Eilert stop drinking and begin constructive work.

Later at a visit, Lövborg is offered a drink. He refuses and Hedda, jealous over the influence that Thea has on Lövborg, tempts him into taking a drink. He then goes to a party where he loses his manuscript. When George Tesman returns home with Lövborg's manuscript, Hedda burns it because she is jealous of it. Later, Lövborg comes to her and confesses how he has failed in his life. Hedda talks him into committing suicide by shooting himself in the temple. Lovborg dies of a wound in the groin. George then begins to reconstruct Lövborg's manuscript with the help of notes provided by Thea Elvsted. Suddenly, Hedda leaves the room, takes her pistols, and commits suicide.

Libretto by Erie Kyrgia

Score in C

(HEDDA walks about the room, raising her arms and clenching her hands in desperation. Then she flings back the curtains from the glass door, and stands there looking out. TESMAN comes in carrying a portmanteau)

Hedda Gabler

George Dousis

after Henrik Ibsen's play

Act IV

Libretto by Erie Kyrgia

Evening, the curtains are drawn close. HEDDA, dressed in black, walks to and fro in the dark room. Then she goes into the back room and is heard to strike a few chords on the piano. She comes in sight again, goes up to the glass door, lifts the curtain a little aside, and looks out into the darkness.
